SUBSTANTIAL BUILDINGS.

The Plans for the Lock Manufacturing

Architect W. C. Noland has completed the plans for the new shelf hardware plant to be erected on the lands of the Roanoke Development Company and with the possible exception of some minor details of construction in the

with the possible exception of some minor details of construction in the main building, the plans will be followed in the work, which us to begin as soon as arrangements can be finished. The plant will consist of three large main buildings, all constructed of brick and iron, and three smaller additions which are to contain the engines, patterns and smelters. The latter will be used for the foundry work and in connection with the smaller of the main buildings, which is the foundry proper trivill run parallel with the right L of the large structure, being at the same time a practical extension of the left L. The pattern and engine houses will be protected by the two wings.

The largest building of the plant, which includes the machine rooms, has a frontage of 200 feet, is two stories in height, with two L additions 146 and 138 feet in length respectively. A number of large skylight; will relieve the monotony of the roof construction, which, by the way, will be iron-trussed, and at the same time furnish light and ventilation to employes. The same plan of mill construction is to be followed in the foundry building, which will be but one story in height, with other dimensions of 250x60 feet. An immense light well, running the entire length of the concern, constitutes one characteristic of the roof, which, like the other building, is to be supported by iron trusses. Heavy girders are used in providing the roof, which, like the other building, is to be supported by iron trusses. Heavy girders are used in providing floor supports, and the floors themselves will be solidly put together, having an uniform thickness of three inches.

A change from the general mill construction plans is under consideration, but in the main the features given will be carried out.
